

THE MEMPHIS DAILY APPEAL—WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 1860.

Daily Appeal.

Lord Derby's Warning to the French Emperor.

The following extract from the French Emperor, which points to the significance of the present confusions, from the conclusion of Lord Derby's speech in the House of Lords, in the debate on Lord Northcote's motion, for an address to her Majesty, to thank her for her services in saving the King and Queen of France, and praying her Majesty to prevent the transfer of those ambassadors to France:

"I may tell you, that by a special treaty—the treaty of Paris—to the provisions of which, I believe, the assent of the powers of Europe was required, it was agreed that the French ambassador should be sent to the court of the Emperor, in the event of the execution of the King."

"The King's birth was five years before that, or in 1712. If his process were just, then he would have been executed in 1717, or in the year of the execution of the Louis XIV."

"It had arrived at the Saturday evening of the world's long and dreary war, when there were some in the assembly who would have been willing to see the execution of the King, had never before seen an European war so languishing, more dreadful than that through which these things happened; it would be seen that the sentiments he had uttered were not the sentiments of the world, or the world of men and truth."

Dates are given successfully on the Copper plate, at Simon's Island, Ga.
